the book investigates the lives of libertae i e female ex slaves in the western part of the roman empire by analysing the inscriptional evidence left behind by these women and those close to them the study considers the freedwomen both inside and outside the domestic environment looking at libertae not only as former slaves but also as wives and mothers workers labourers service providers and professionals besides their wider roles as members of their communities the innovative aspect of this study is the choice of rigorously giving centre stage to epigraphic documents rather than the well known literary texts this approach is essential to foreground the freedwomen s point of view in place of the perspective of the elite male authors that has however hitherto been given priority in the modern discussion of roman freedpersons the analysed sample nearly 10 000 inscriptions includes texts from every area of the western roman empire this large data pool allows wide reaching detailed qualitative analysis as well as quantitative comparisons enabling moreover highly differentiated insights into the similarities and differences that existed for libertae across the empire daniel a dombrowski brings together the thought of the 20th century philosophy's greatest political liberal john rawls with the thought of the great process philosophers alfred north whitehead and charles hartshorne he shows that political liberalism is intimately linked with process philosophy renaming it process liberalism he justifies this process liberalism in contrast to four potentially troublesome sources or influences metaphysics religion right wing politics and left wing politics dombrowski engages a series of interlocutors and alternative positions including franklin i gamwell timothy d snyder martin heidegger and karl marx in conclusion he offers a compelling intricate and resourceful argument for nonhuman animal rights based on rawlsian principles which in turn forms the basis of a future environmental ethics in an era where new areas of life and new problems call for normative solutions while the plurality of values in society challenge the very basis for normative solutions this book looks at a growing field of research on the relations between social and legal norms new technologies and social media offer new ways to communicate about normative issues and the centrality of formal law and how normativity comes about is a question for debate this book offers empirical and theoretical research in the field of social and legal norms and will inspire future debate and research in terms of internationalization and cross national comparative studies it presents a consistent picture of empirical research in different social and organizational areas and will deepen the theoretical understanding regarding the interplay between social and legal norms including chapters written from four different aspects of normativity the contributors argue that normativity is a result of combinations between law in books law in action social norms and social practice the book uses a variety of different international examples ranging from sweden uzbekistan colombia and mexico primarily aimed at scholars in sociology of law socio legal studies law and legal theory the book will also interest those in sociology political science and psychology
